

A shortage of epidemiologists has been felt in most of the world, but more acutely so in developing countries. Because of the important role epidemiology plays in public health work, the present